

The City of Adak, Alaska, the westernmost city in the United States is a community-centered among the most productive fisheries in the West. Our prime location and strategic assets, transferred as part of the Base Realignment and Closure process, make Adak a strong area for future growth and economic activity in relation to the Arctic. Whether you visit to take part in harvesting some of Adak's abundant caribou herd, bird watching or to explore parts of Adak's prior military history, welcome to Adak "where the winds blow and friendships grow".
